

Blog okay for presenting my survey analysis?

Between Chris Andrews, You, Kristi Dunks and Ronda L Wery

Ronda L Wery

July 27 at 2:40pm

Is there any problem with me presenting my analysis in a blog? I know we are pretty open to all things social networking, but I just thought I'd check in. If no objections, then I'll do a WordPress blog.

Chris Andrews

July 27 at 2:51pm

I don't see why not (though the fact that you have enough analysis for a whole blog scares me a little...)

Monica Wesley

July 27 at 3:01pm

I thought we were going to combine these into the website – that's how I've been proceeding with the design of the site. What form is your analysis taking, Ronda? Text, graphics... something else? It seems to me the more information we can embed in one site vs. linking out would make for a more coherent visitor experience. Just my two cents.

Ronda L Wery

July 27 at 3:20pm

That's why I asked. I guess I don't really need a blog for it. I'm just having trouble managing the pieces, and blogs are an easy way to pull things together--but probably moreso for me than for our site visitors. It seems like the analysis wants to be a bunch of different things--some graphics, some text, some podcast or video (if I can ever get my voice back). Perhaps just a powerpoint or prezi with different media incorporated. Back to basics.

Monica Wesley

July 27 at 3:26pm

I'm prepared for all of that stuff... text summaries, graphs, charts, audio, prezi, whatever you want to throw at me to summarize your data. For instance, what I'm doing is a text summary of my questions, along with a Wordle graphic and a Prezi presentation. If you want to organize them in folders by question... all the analysis of question 12 (or whatever) I can keep it all together on the website.

One page of the website will be dedicated to the data, analyzed question by question in whatever file format you want to do. I'm trying to get the prototype files out tonight. I think it will make clear what I've been thinking about for the website.

Kristi Dunks

July 27 at 3:31pm

FYI– I am going to do a video (no, not of me dancing) with all of the data and information that is causing my brain to start to smoke.

Monica Wesley

July 27 at 3:33pm

Should be fine. Adding a video player to a website is not too difficult. I think a video will be awesome.