You can see the homepage of www.metaAcademia.com right now. It's live although none of the links other than the one to the blog work right now from the Internet. Be forewarned, though, our conference call quality was not so great. Lots of heavy sibillant S's... frankly, we all sound like we lisp, but it's understandable.

I've tested this in Opera, Safari and Firefox. If anyone's running Internet Explorer, I most interested in knowing if the Quicktime audio players work. If you see anything else troubling let me know. Screenshots to accompany what you're seeing and concerned about really help out. Thanks.

Looks good. I do not have explorer on my Mac- sorry.

I am wondering if we should format our bios to be the same. Some are in first person, others are not. Does this matter? I would be happy to edit if you think we need this.

Looking forward to the rest of the site.

I don't think it matters with the bios, personally. But let's see what others think.

I love the website thus far! Nice look!

And we thound thuper thmart in the converthattion you pohtted for uth. But theriouthly. . .

Our conference call comes through just fine in Internet Explorer.

On a side note, I was actually able to play all four sections of the call simultaneously (i.e., if you don't let one finish or click it off, you can start the next and they'll play simultaneously. It sounds kinda cool. . . .

Thanks, Ronda, for letting me know about IE. It was the one thing there that I worried about. Apparently IE does things differently with embedded Quicktime audio.

Yes, before I was able to set the players to not autoplay, you'd open up the page and there would be this cacaphony of conversation going on. Had to put a stop to that immediately.

Hey thanks for editing my bio. It's better than it was, AND you were kind enough not to point out the irony of my long-windedness, given my urge for conciseness on the TeachingRhetoric wiki. Too kind!
